Report of the School Board.

REMARKS AND SUGGESTIONS.

Not believing in publishing all the imperfections of human nature, for many of which it is not the least responsible, I will depart from the somewhat too general custom, avoiding both flattery and useless censure, and confine myself to facts, for too frequently does it happen that any and all failings are discussed again and again, until threadbare, so that well known as these are, it would seem to be grievously overdoing the thing to proclaim them again through this report.

TEACHERS.

During the year ten different teachers have been in the schools of the town, one only teaching the whole school year, viz. District No. 3.

Several teachers, who were very satisfactory, for good and sufficient reasons were obliged to leave their work before the school year was ended, consequently new teachers were employed and came in to carry on the work.

In our opinion the too frequent change of teachers is one great injury to schools. No two persons can manage a school or impart instruction in the same manner. So the pupils are being subjected to a constant series of experiments and new methods, without deriving any great benefit. The entrance of almost any teacher upon the duties of a school is, in some respects, an experiment, and especially so in the case of a teacher who has had no experience.

I am sorry to say that two of our schools the latter part of the year have not enjoyed the degree of harmony we could wish; second term in District No. 4; third term in District No. 2. (Intermediate).

To be a successful school teacher one must be fitted for that office. It has been appropriately remarked that "as the teacher is so is the school," for he or she is constantly imparting character and manners, and these qualities shape the thoughts and life of a child.

INSTRUCTION.

In regard to methods of instruction they were generally good, but would admit of degrees of comparison.

Much attention has been exercised with regard to reading, and many scholars in town are excellent readers, and by introduction of supplementary reading a new interest will be awakened and more progress made than when confined to a long used and dry textbook.

Spelling has been well taught, both written and oral, and many pupils can do themselves much credit by correct spelling.

Each teacher has been urged to special effort toward training every pupil to become a good writer. Consequently there are many good writers among the children. In arithmetic we have tried to have the teaching practical, and to a great degree it has been so. Commendable progress has been made in grammar and arithmetic.

ORDER.

Among the many ingredients compounded to make a school a success, none is more essential than order. Schools invariably, where order is secured in the right way, are successful; where order is wanting, respect, interest in studies, and improvement are always at a discount. Order established by a mutual understanding between teachers and scholars produces better results than obtained by physical force, as a rule. Not alone in the school-room should order be observed, but also about the school yard, and on the homeward way. Politeness and kind words cost nothing, and are worth everything.

Decision, gentleness, and knowledge of human nature are points of excellence in a ruler. In the best ordered schools the teacher does not seem to be governing at all, yet she keeps her hand upon the helm. Prompt without being hasty in judgment, and watchful of beginnings of evil, she checks little disorders before they become so headstrong as to require severe measures.

ATTENDANCE.

The average attendance for the school year has been nearly the same as last reported. Per cent. of attendance, 80.

The most unfavorable weather came on during the last term of school, causing many of the small children to be absent, thus lowering the average; otherwise there would have been an improvement in this direction. Tardy marks number 150; a year ago the attention of parents was called to the importance of having better attendance and less tardiness; the same hint applies now. Parents, help us on these lines.

VISITORS.

As reported in the school registers, the number of visits made by parents and others were 375, an increase over last year.

SCHOOL HOUSES.

A small amount of money has been expended in paint on the inside of several school rooms, which adds very much to the cleanliness as well as appearance; the old saying "a stitch in time saves nine" will work all right in relation to our school houses; also the old practice of paying for glass and other fixtures broken in and about the school house and yard by scholars, should be kept in vogue.

TEXT BOOKS.

No change has been made in text books during the year. Five outline maps have been introduced.

That the town may make adequate appropriations, that teachers may be employed who honor their calling, that children may appreciate the advantages derived from a good, thorough discipline in our schools, and that all may confine their efforts to advance the cause of education and promote good citizenship, is the desire of your School Board.

Very respectfully,

JAMES B. MARTIN, Superintendent.
